Where Global Wood Traders Meet in China

Economic Background

In 2019, IMF predicted that global economic growth would be weak at the beginning of the year and then picks up in the second half of the year. Chinese President Xi Jinping pointed out that the next decade will be a crucial one in which new global growth drivers will take the place of old ones. The complex international environment of trade protectionism and Sino-US trade frictions bring uncertainties to the development of the wood industry in China while the rise of production cost, tight market demand and awareness of environment protection set up new standards to the industry. In a word, the future of wood industry in China is full of opportunities and challenges.
